

best," which did not do in these days. Dr. H. GORDON thought Dr. Harvey-Smith had done a great service not only to hospital junior staff but to the whole profession. The Organization Committee should also consider the position in the B.M.A. of young doctors in all branches of medicine. Was their place in the negotiating machinery satisfactory?

Regional Organization

Dr. R. A. A. R. LAWRENCE thought that the regional organization of hospital junior staff was the most difficult part of the problem. If that could be worked out, and they had efficient and skilled men to represent them, many of the difficulties would be solved.

Dr. A. B. GILMOUR saw that there were technical difficulties in making the H.J.S. Group Committee a standing committee, but he thought that hospital junior doctors were a special group in a class of their own. He wondered whether a special formula could not be devised for giving them the status of an independent committee as an interim measure while Dr. Potter's suggestion was considered. Dr. C. C. LUTTON was against making the H.J.S. Group Committee a standing committee. The blame for the current difficulties was fairly and squarely on the shoulders of the senior men, who had not interested themselves in their junior staff.

Dr. H. C. W. BAKER also supported an alteration in the C.C. and S. Committee's name to Hospital Services Committee, and he added that junior staff should be properly represented on it.

It was agreed to recommend to the Council that the Central Consultants and Specialists Committee should be invited to consider altering its name to "Hospital Services Committee" in view of the fact that the majority of the doctors they represented were not consultants.

It was also recommended that regional conferences should be called periodically to disseminate information and to discuss the problems of hospital junior staff.

Association Membership

The CHAIRMAN reported that the B.M.A. membership was 68,064, as compared with 68,034 at the same time last year.

Galloway states that he was mistaken in telling the Public Health Committee (Supplement, 8 January, p. 7) that the British Housewives' League was represented at a recent meeting arranged by the Central Council for Health Education to discuss the fluoridation of water supplies. Dr. Galloway thought a representative of another organization was a representative of the British Housewives' League, and he apologizes for any embarrassment he may have caused.

The Consumers' Association also states that it was not among the bodies represented at the meeting arranged by the Central Council for Health Education to discuss fluoridation of water supplies.

The number of general practitioners in England and Wales decreased by 130 between 1 July and 30 September 1965 and not between 1 October and 31 December 1965, as stated in the report of the G.M.S. Committee meeting (Supplement, 5 February, p. 27).
