The GP and the Specialist

Radiology

N. L. BISHOP

Radiology was recently reviewed by a Departmental Working Party on Radiology Services for General Practitioners. This dealt with the general principles and the management and the appropriate methods. In the final paragraph, radiologists emphasized that many GP's should have a radiologist available to give advice, though the final decision should be left to the GP. Radiologists and GPs should be able to refer for specialist opinion without any restriction.

Organising a Practice

Advantages of independent practice over partnership

J. A. WILLIS

In my previous paper I discussed the advantages of a self-managed practice. I believe that many doctors are now beginning to see the advantages of independent practice. It is a time of change and I believe that there will be more of these practices in the future.

References

The GP and the Specialist

Radiology

N. L. BISHOP

The GP and the Specialist

Radiology

N. L. BISHOP

Radiology was recently reviewed by a Departmental Working Party on Radiology Services for General Practitioners. This dealt with the general principles and the management and the appropriate methods. In the final paragraph, radiologists emphasized that many GPs should have a radiologist available to give advice, though the final decision should be left to the GP. Radiologists and GPs should be able to refer for specialist opinion without any restriction.

Advantages of independent practice over partnership

J. A. WILLIS

In my previous paper I discussed the advantages of a self-managed practice. I believe that many doctors are now beginning to see the advantages of independent practice. It is a time of change and I believe that there will be more of these practices in the future.

References