Practice Research

Well man clinic in general practice

G N MARSH, C CHEW

Abstract

The establishment of a well man clinic run actively by a general practitioner would enable the prevention and early detection of many diseases. The well man clinic was established in 1979 and showed some previously undiagnosed diseases. Effective primary care predominantly prevent deaths, but the present work is aimed at showing what can be done by the well man clinic. The present work is aimed at showing what can be done by the well man clinic.

Method and results

Discussions within the primary health care team in breast examination, a well man clinic was established in 1979 and showed some previously undiagnosed diseases. Effective primary care predominantly prevent deaths, but the present work is aimed at showing what can be done by the well man clinic. The present work is aimed at showing what can be done by the well man clinic.

References

BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL, VOLUME 288, 21 JANUARY 1984