Corrections

Allopurinol.—We regret that the mention of allopurinol in the Today's Drugs article on "Hazards of Drug Prescribing in Pregnancy" (22 July, p. 220) was inaccurate.

Allopurinol acts by inhibiting xanthine oxidase and it is a valuable and relatively safe drug for use in gout and in some other conditions of hyperuricaemia. Thus allopurinol has been used as an adjunct in cancer chemotherapy to diminish hyperuricaemia and to improve the chemotherapeutic index of 6-mercaptopurine, which is oxidized by xanthine oxidase. The toxicity to the host of this combination is not necessarily increased to the same degree as is toxicity to the tumour. Allopurinol has not been shown to be teratogenic in man, neither is it mainly used in cancer treatment. The sentence in the article should therefore have read: "Apart from thalidomide, these are drugs mainly used in the treatment of cancer—antimetabolites (such as methotrexate and 6-mercaptopurine), alkylating agents (such as chlorambucil), and antibiotic substances (such as actinomycin D)."

Cyclandelate.—The manufacturers of Cyclospasmol have drawn attention to the article on cyclandelate in Today's Drugs, 3 June, p. 622. A starting dose of 100 mg. three times daily was recommended. Cyclospasmol is no longer manufactured in 100-mg. tablets, and the manufacturers recommend a starting dose of 200 mg. four times a day, which may be raised to 1,600 mg. daily if necessary. The recommended maintenance dose is 200 mg. b.d.

We regret that the name of the publisher, Butterworth & Co. Ltd., London, was omitted from the review of Clinical Surgery: Abdomen and Rectum and Anus, edited by Professor Charles Rob, Mr. Rodney Smith, and Sir Clifford Naunton Morgan (22 July, p. 224).
