One who spent a great deal of time in doing very much what doctors were doing day in and day out: bringing relief and healing where tension and disease previously obtained . . . Jesus had no medical training such as present day doctors had. He lived in a day of what could only be regarded as appalling ignorance as to the cause and treatment of disease. Superstition reigned, and was to reign for many centuries before the winds of scientific knowledge could blow most of its clouds away. But the evidence was strong that Jesus had very definite healing powers and that, as He moved about, touching one here and speaking to another there, He left in His wake a stream of health and sanity, which made men wonder and praise God.

Personal Relationships

Dr. Coggan gave examples of Christ's healing powers in dealing with a man who was crippled, another who was "deformity possessed," and a third whom He cured of paralysis. He did not need, he said, in the presence of an audience of doctors to apply point by point the lessons which a study of Jesus at work brought home to them. That would be to insult their intelligence. Nor did he need to underline the difficulties inherent in establishing with their patients such relationships as Jesus appeared to have had with those who came to Him in distress.

"We are cumbered about with forms which have to be filled up, generally in triplicate, and are hedged around with restrictions and conditions which make the achievement of personal relations of any depth very difficult indeed," said the Archbishop. "To a lesser degree, perhaps, this is true in the parson's life as well. But we know that, once we allow this to happen, once we cease to fight for person to person relationships with our patients—and that in depth—then the glory is departed from our work, a calling becomes a profession, and we become hacks."

In an excellent chapter entitled "The Christian Approach to the Disabled, the Incurable and the Dying" in Ideal Medicine, the author had written: "An unashamed but unostentatious Christian conviction, a genuine love finding its outlet in first-class medical care, and a real personal concern for the patient's family, all these may bear fruit in due course." That was well said, and he personally believed there was no short cut. When they obeyed the summons and answered the writings of Jesus: "Come unto Me . . . take My yoke and learn of Me,", then, and only then, did they find that "rest unto our souls" which enabled them in some measure to bring a like healing, a similar rest, to others.

There was something infectious about the life of a man who daily prayed along these lines: "Grant, O Lord, that this day may be lived in the calm of Thy presence, the rest of Thy will, and the peace of Thy government." He commended it to them.

Corrections

The following motion standing in the name of Tynedale was adopted by the Annual Representative Meeting: "That this Representative Body is not satisfied with the letter dated 24 March 1970 from the Secretary of State in connexion with the phasing of the Review Body’s award in 1966. The Representative Body now instructs Council to take whatever steps may be necessary to remove the £10 million withheld by phasing."

Owing to a printing error in the report of the Meeting (Supplement, 4 July, p. 10) it was wrongly stated that the motion was in the name of Reading and that it was, by leave, withdrawn.

We regret that Dr. J. C. Oakley’s remarks at the A.R.M. on patients not registered with a doctor were misreported (4 July, p. 10). They should have read: "People moved into the area and did not bother to register, and they did not qualify to be treated either as emergency cases or as temporary residents. Consequently no payment was received from them.'
