Correction

Continuous Insulin Infusion

We regret that certain references were misplaced in the letter from Professor E. F. Pfeiffer and others (7 September, p. 626). The second sentence in the second paragraph should have read as follows: "Acetazolamide is a carbonic anhydrase- regulated insulin infusion (consisting of a Tech- nicon AutoAnalyzer, a microvolume glucose and insulin infusion pump, and a teleprinter)" is used the patient requires from 600 to 1,000 u of insulin per day, and takes up to about 120 minutes that is, long as blood glucose levels have not returned to normal."
