SIR JAMES CLARK.

We have much pleasure in stating that, during his recent visit to Ireland, with the Queen, Sir James Clark has been elected an honorary fellow of the Irish College of Physicians. This is, we believe, an honour very rarely bestowed; and it will be allowed, by all liberal men, to be the more deserved in the present instance, from the fact that Sir James was one of a very small minority of London licentiates who refused to accept the fellowship of the London College, when offered by them, from a conscientious feeling that the great body of licentiates had been unfairly treated, by the College withholding privileges to which they felt themselves to be entitled.—Lancet.
